Mar 30, 2021 Version 195.1 Optimizations for a better, faster, stronger mobile experience. More to come. Peace, love, and happy trading. While I can't speak for any of the competition since I'm brand new to investing I am a quick learner and research as much as I can and I have to say I love the flexibility of this app to be able to see whatever info you like to watch. Also does a decent job of teaching you the basics with their learner videos. I only trade in stocks right now and I like that my money is available right away and there is almost 0 commission fees 99% of the time. I have found a few stocks that do charge a small fee for some reason. Maybe risk related, so I pass on those for now till I know more. Obviously still more to learn but I'm having fun and investing for the long term. Can't wait to see what the future holds but either way at least I should be better off than if I had never started. There are a few things you must do on a pc on this app like cancel/edit auto contributions as the app doesn't let you do that or choose if you want dividends auto re invested which isn't on the app as an option either but other than that the app does an amazing job of having a huge amount of customization. Now if only I could figure out how to do this stuff for a living lol. That would be a pretty cool career imo but for now I'll just keep watching and learning and building my portfolio. Thanks again TD. There is so much more information and charts to analyze than Robinhood. You can change so many settings and dive into finding your own investment strategies. This app is very intimidating at first compared to Robinhood, but I strongly encourage you to dive in. Start simple by creating your watchlists. Then when want to purchase click on trade in upper right corner. It will already be set to 100 shares and instead of changing it with the +|- simply click directly on the number 100 to type the exact number of shares. Then either buy it at the market price which is if the lock icon is unlocked or lock the lock and click directly on the price and type the exact price you want to limit buy it at. Click send or confirm in upper right and your order is underway. If your order goes through then you can view your portfolio under positions tab at bottom next to watchlists. Next to that you can check on or cancel your orders under the orders tab. Hope this helps you get the confidence to give it a try. So far I love TD Ameritrade one week in. Most people say that TDA and this app are better for serious traders and investors. While the service is more reliable and the commission fee is reasonable, the horribly outdated interface is an instant turn off and is the primary reason that I can't stand any of this company's products. I invest in options trading as a job and the vast majority of other brokers have generally modernized their interface to a degree because they realize that the majority of investors don't need a wall of numbers and charts to look at. Some people like to feel cool having all of that information, but it's unnecessary and deceptive at best, and this broker uses it as a flashy selling point. On top of that, they claim to have instant deposits but fail to mention that it will take up to a week (mine was 8 days) to deposit funds for options trading. So, a large part of my portfolio sat in transit, unable to be used, because their instant deposit only applies to stock trading. When I spoke to an agent, they said I could just cancel the transfer and I would have my money back that day but that ended up not working. I tried using the app for a few days but it's much much worse than any I've used before and I would much rather use Robinhood if only because I know they're a mediocre company with a decent application. I want nothing more than for it to be the solution I use going forward, including for futures. However, I play a lot in paper where I test my stock and option strategies and otherwise just experiment without risking capital, which is the point of course. I have a live, non-delayed feed, but after noticing some issues which tech support could not initially replicate (after many inquiries), I finally got a rep (just before the holidays), who finally asked me if I was in paper or live. The light went on, for me at least... She then was able to see what I saw, which was not seen in the live version. I have these discrepancies noted on my other computer, but I'll give it a go from my memory... I noticed in my left panel watchlist that the put / call ratio criteria that I had selected was static, day after day, week after week even. I wanted to use this data to aid me in my decision-making to see how worthwhile it might be, and it was, and remains useless, in my paper account. The rep saw that it was working properly, updating on the fly in the live account. She had no explanation as to why. I had found other stuff too, which just has me very frustrated as I now feel like I can't use paper for its intended purpose. Here's one I remember, but I didn't make the time to confirm it against the live account. Either way, it's wrong... I have an EFT watchlist. I believe that focusses on option sizzle, and it constantly has the ticker FIO. This is not an ETF, but a stock. I told TOS about this, and the put / call stuff months ago... Anyone else notice differences (btween paper and live)? I find myself using TOS less now and I'm seriously contemplating something like MC or AB. I'd like to think that the two should mirror each other in all important ways...
